Course/Module description:

In the digital media environment the reuse and remixing of found footage become important techniques in different fields. Amateurs produce videos from existing material and upload them on Youtube. Video artists reuse existing cinematic images in order to analyze the social impact of mediated images. Filmmakers explore the archive and use cinematic techniques to contextualize and analyze old, unknown or forgotten films. In media studies the production of audiovisual essays becomes an important tool to practically investigate visual materials and moving images. The workshop will deal with theoretical, methodological and practical issues in order to develop strategies how to contextualize and analyze existing visual footage through editing and filmmaking.

Course/Module aims:

The aim of the course is to give insight archive footage and film compilations based on archival material, to develop and apply cinematic techniques in order to review and analyze archive films, and to provide practical knowledge how to prepare video clips from cinematic-archival and visual-digital materials. Therefore we will focus in a significant chapter of the visual memory of the Shoah, and research film footage related to the liberation of Nazi Germany and the concentration camps.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

- critical sense of media, images, archival footage
- media historiographic approach towards history and cinema
- (film) analytical and research skills
- practical knowledge in editing and appropriating visual materials and footage
