Course/Module description:
This course will examine trends and changes in the EU's policy towards the many Muslim citizens, born and raised within the EU zone during the last decades. We will focus, among other things, on issues of identity, faced by European Muslims within and outside cultural enclaves, and in the public and the political sphere. During the course, we will try to answer several questions:

- Is massive accession of the European Muslim youth to extremist organizations like ISIS and al-Qaeda caused by a confrontation of their Muslim identity with a non-Muslim environment?
- How does this phenomenon influence the foreign and security policy of the European Union? Have there been changes in legislation because of the need to cope with it?

Among other things, we will review the various Islamic movements, common in Europe, Muslim authority figures, born and operating in the EU, as well as the phenomenon of recruitment through social networks (Twitter, Facebook, and blogs) which are commonly used as platforms for the dissemination of radical ideologies.
