Course/Module description:

The aim of the course is to offer a survey of a variety of literary masterpieces from ancient cultures and up to later Middle Ages. We will read different genres (epics, plays, poetry and more) from different times and places through a comparative lens, and in so doing we will inspect the politics of the making of the canon of world masterpieces. In each class, we will focus on one or more literary masterpiece and encounter its historical and literary contexts. Among the themes we shall focus on in our analysis are: the human condition, literature and ethics, identity and gender, and the reflection offered by the works themselves on reading and writing literature.

Course/Module aims:

- To expose first year students of literary programs and the "corner stone" program to representative works of world literature

- To provide students with basic tools for a deep, comparative and critical analysis of literary works.

- To encourage critical thought on the politics of formation of world literature and canon, and hence on the role and function of literature in societies.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

Following this course, students will be able to discuss central literary masterpieces that shaped the world intelligently and informedly.

They will have a basic knowledge of key moments in the development of world literature from antiquity to the early modern age.

They will be able to analyze literary works based on main themes that dominate them, the historical contexts in which they were shaped, and the dialogue formed with the literary tradition in which they developed.
