Teaching Staff: Dr. Ori Shachmon
Course/Module description:
This course provides students with basic working tools in the field of Arabic dialectology, viz. transcription skills, dialect classification and analysis, etc. In addition, the students are exposed to the very different types of Arabic dialects which are spoken in the Palestinian realm.

Course/Module aims:
Along the course we learn principles of linguistic fieldwork and the students conduct their own fieldwork and record native speakers of Palestinian dialects. The results are then transcribed and translated, and carefully analyzed according to the classifications and linguistic topics studied in the previous semester. Each student is referred to professional articles relevant to his/her recorded materials. The students present their work in class and share their experience with their classmates.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:
Students will develop awareness and sensitivity to variation in Arabic dialects and will acquire basic tools to define the differences using the accepted linguistic terminology. They will become familiar with the terminology and prominent researchers in the field, and will thus be able to read the scientific literature and to continue their studies in the field of Arabic dialectology.
