Course/Module description:

The translation movement of the 'Abbasid period flooded the Arabic-speaking world with new ideas, not least among them fundamental concepts of Greek philosophy. The question of the beginning of human language was one of them, and this question occupied thinkers of all religions and from a variety of fields. We will examine the writings of Muslim and Jewish thinkers on this issue, along with relevant secondary material on the topic.

Course/Module aims:

1. Expose the student to basic concepts and terms of the philosophy of language
2. Expose the student to the historical, cultural and religious background of this question in the Islamicate sphere.
3. Gain familiarity with central texts on the subject in Arabic, composed by Muslims and Jews.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

1. Gain familiarity with basic concepts and terms relating to the philosophy of language
2. Develop the ability to analyze texts on the topic of the development of language
3. Compare and contrast between thinkers and discussions on the topic.
4. Via this topic in particular, to gain a general appreciation for the contribution of classical thought to Jewish and Muslim discussions of this subject.
