Course/Module description:

This seminar will study the stylistic and thematic connections between Expressionist theatre – mainly German – and the cinematic genre known as “Film Noir.” This genre developed mainly in the ‘40s and the ‘50s of the 20th century in the US, on which we’ll concentrate, as well as in France. Some of the more important directors of these films were exiles from Germany and Austria, some of whom had also worked in the theatre (Fritz Lang, Billy Wilder, Edgar Ulmer, Robert Siodmak, Michael Curtiz, Otto Preminger). These directors often succeeded in combining a European “gaze” with an American “voice.” Students will watch a range of Noir films (on their own, in the Media library), and through them we’ll analyze the transformation of Expressionistic subjects and topoi such as: the anti-hero, the utopian dream, the threatening metropolis, identity and society, crime and nihilism. In the Film Noir these subjects take on an aspect of moral decay, evil and paranoia; and Expressionist stage designs are transformed into light and shadow, extreme close-up and nightmarish visions.

Course/Module aims:

To understand the principle characteristics of the German Expressionistic theatre and its influence on the important film genre, “film noir”.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

An understanding of the history and aesthetics of the two media, theatre and cinema which, in this case, share a world view, and an understanding of the connection between them.

To understand how Film Noir ‘translated’ the stylistic elements of German Expressionist theatre
