Course/Module description:

Latin America's political DNA is often associated with authoritarianism and its resulting effects in terms of power abuses and human rights violations. This course sets out to assess this thesis, asking whether it is justified at the light of current developments in the region. It starts with a broad overview of theories of authoritarianism in Latin America and examines their taxonomical implications with reference to its different kinds. We examine particularly the emergence of "new", post-democratization, patterns of authoritarianism and its diverse manifestations. First, it surveys state authoritarian practices against identitarian and social groups such as indigenous peoples, minorities, women, LGBTQ and young people. Second, it identifies popular support for leaders endorsing authoritarian actions as well as for hard-handed law enforcement policies. This course's bottom line is that while authoritarian regimes are no longer ubiquitous in the region, the resort to authoritarian practices in democratic times has not only persisted in most countries but also become institutionalized in some cases.

Course/Module aims:

.To provide a general understanding on the main patterns and practices of authoritarianism in Latin America.

.To provide theoretical and conceptual tools for grasping the changing nature of authoritarianism in the region.

.To analyze empirically authoritarian strategies and practices and concomitant challenging and supportive reactions of social groups and individuals to them.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

- Think critically about the nature of authoritarianism in Latin America.
- Analyze its impact on identitarian and social forces and democratic rule at large.
- Identify the key themes, concepts and debates concerning the adaptability of authoritarianism in Latin America and its contemporary bases of support.
