Course/Module description:

Dialectical Behavior Therapy (DBT) is a treatment method developed by Marsha Linhan in the early 90's to treat borderline personality disorder and the suicidal and/or self harming patients. The method is now used in the treatment of other complex cases, especially those suffering from emotional regulation problems, including addictions, eating disorders and more. It is an integrative therapeutic approach based on a number of elements, including cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT), dialectical philosophy, the bio-social theory and practices of mindfulness derived from Buddhism. The method also incorporates therapeutic elements from self psychology and the intersubjective approach. During the course we will learn the theoretical concepts in the basis of the method and learn to apply the therapeutic principles in the practical work. The course is with an emphasis on applicability and encourages sharing examples from the therapeutic practice.

Course/Module aims:

The purpose of the course is to give theoretical and practical knowledge in DBT, including preparing the patient for treatment, the therapeutic contract preparation, use of validation, and behavioral analysis of problem solving strategies. Familiarity with the skills learned in the patients group (mindfulness, emotional regulation, interpersonal effectiveness and distress tolerance), with the principles of using contact over the phone and with the principles of working in the counseling group for caregivers.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

1. Characterize patients suitable for DBT.

- 2. Formulate and conduct a DBT treatment contract.
- 3. Build a hierarchy of therapeutic targets according to the principles of DBT.
- 4. Describe the therapeutic process using concepts of the method.
- 5. Analyze therapeutic dilemmas from a dialectical perspective.

6. Implement specific therapeutic strategies, such as validation, behavioral analysis and troubleshooting.

7. Integrate DBT skills to to the analytic work.
