Teaching Staff:

Dr. Michael Gillis

Course/Module description:

The course examines some of the central issues that arise with respect to teaching religions in different cultural contexts and educational systems. We will see how the field of religious education confronts secularism and pluralism on the one hand, and fundamentalist trends, on the other. The course will also look at the rivalry and dialogue between the so-called Abrahamic faiths of Judaism, Christianity and Islam and their expression in education. This will be done by studying the complex cases of Jesus and Abraham as potential bridging figures between faiths as well as the educational significance of changes in Christian attitudes to Judaism since the Second World War. The course will include two field activities held outside the hours of the course.

Course/Module aims:

The course aims to provide students with a grasp of the central issues of the field of religious education. It seeks to cultivate a depth of understanding of the meaning of other religious traditions and their relationship with Jews and Judaism. It will provide conceptual tools that can serve educational practice in religious education.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

- Course outcomes are that participants will be able to:
- Participate in an informed manner in discussion on the relationship between Judaism and other religious traditions.
 - Reflect deeply on the educational challenges of teaching about other religions in Jewish education.
 - To develop their own educational approach to the issues raised in the course.
