Course/Module description:

What do we gain from conceptualizing the vast Indian ocean as a “Muslim Sea”? This course explores how Islam spread and was shaped by intimate connections between East Africa and Southeast Asia via maritime routes.

Course/Module aims:

Obtain an understanding of how Muslim communities managed to stay in touch across the vast expanse of the Indian Ocean and how Islam came to the region in the first place. Gain skills in academic writing, reading, and analyzing primary and secondary sources.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

- Outline how Islam spread throughout the Indian Ocean region
- Debate whether there is such a thing as “Monsoon Islam”
- Differentiate between premodern and modern experiences of the hajj
- Recall what role genealogies play among Muslim Indian Ocean communities
- Point out the impact of European colonialism in the wider Indian Ocean world
- Establish the importance of Sufism and Islamic law in maritime connections

Attendance requirements(%):

100%

Teaching arrangement and method of instruction: Discussions, group work, analysis of primary sources

Course/Module Content:

Over the last few years, global history has taken a remarkable “oceanic turn.” The main focus lies no longer on local, regional, or national historiography. Instead, the interest in connections and networks across vast geographical and temporal distances has taken center stage. For Islamic Studies, scholarship on the Indian Ocean, which ties together the Middle East, Africa, South Asia, and Southeast Asia, is particularly productive. This course focuses on the premodern period until the early decades of the 20th century. What does it mean to consider the Indian Ocean as a “Muslim Sea”? What has this seemingly boundless maritime space to do with conversions to Islam and the spread of religious ideas? What can we learn in terms of Muslim seafaring and trade, on issues such as slavery, Sufism, and the changing character of the hajj? We will also discuss how disruptive (and enabling, to some extent) European colonial expansion was for Muslim communities around the Indian Ocean.
