Course/Module description:
The two important trends in the formation of the Islamic Middle East are Arabization and Islamization. In this course, we will survey and analysis both developments, that are connected but not identical, while looking at theoretical literature on religious and linguistic change. Islamization beyond the Middle East will be examined, as well as in modern times (such as in Europe).

Course/Module aims:
To teach about two central matters in the history of the Middle East and Islam, with implications until today. A better understanding of the processes of religious and linguistic change, particularly in the Islamic Middle East.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:
The students will learn in depth about two central matters in the region’s history, with relevance to world history. They will gain further skills in critical reading of original sources and modern scholarship, and the historical method as applied in Middle Eastern Studies and the study of religious change.

Attendance requirements(%):
80% (i.e., 11 lessons out of 14)

Teaching arrangement and method of instruction: The lessons will be a mixture of lectures by the teachers, discussions of studies read by the students, presentations by students and reading of sources (in translation and in original language if possible).
