The course will discuss approaches in the field of world history and their impact on the study of Islam and the Middle East in the medieval and modern periods. Discussions will also include comparative history theories and key topics in the history of Islam over time.

Course Objectives:

To examine the relationship between world history research and Islamic and Middle Eastern studies. We will discuss the questions that concern historians, such as the sources available to them, and the methodologies they use. The objective is to present a multidimensional and inter-disciplinary picture of the current research, and to outline future research directions.

Learning Outcomes:

At the end of this course, students will be able to:

- Evaluate and criticize prevailing research approaches in world history; analyze aspects of state, society, and culture in an Islamic and Middle Eastern context, from a comparative perspective; use social and cultural tools and methodologies.
