Course/Module description:

In recent decades there has been a growing recognition that public participation in planning processes is essential, yet it is a complex issue with many aspects. Although public participation is sometimes carried out as part of the planning process, there is much criticism of the effectiveness of the process and the extent to which its products are implemented. Some of the criticism is directed towards procedural aspects, but some raises substantive questions about power relations, exclusion of groups and the potential inherent in public participation to create just planning. During the course, we will ask who the 'public' is and whether it has common interests, and we will learn from the knowledge and experience of processes in the public, private and third sectors. The course will include both theoretical lectures on core issues as well as guest lectures by planning practitioners.

Course/Module aims:

- 1. To examine the concept of public participation and its components in the Israeli and global context.*
- 2. To survey a variety of public participation approaches and platforms.*
- 3. To examine regulatory and institutional aspects of public participation.*

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

At the end of this course, students will:

- 1. Be able to identify social factors that influence the public participation process.*
- 2. Familiarize themselves with different methodologies for involving the public in planning processes.*
- 3. Be able to place public participation processes that take place in Israel in the context of a global urban theory.*

4. Apply insights

and practical aspects in their professional work.

\ Please note that in light of the uncertainty due to covid-19, there may be changes in the topics and order of the lectures and reading materials*
