Course/Module description:

Political communication is a field of research examining the various ways in which the media, politicians, and citizens exchange information of a political nature. This class discusses key concepts and presents key findings from political communication research. In class, we will define key concepts in the study of political communication, present the key actors operating in this arena and their motivations, and discuss the effects of political communications on citizens and on the political process more broadly.

Course/Module aims:

Based on the main theories and current research in the field of political communication, the course will provide students with a basic understanding of the relationship between media and politics.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

1. Define political communication and its theoretical interests.
2. Identify important studies and prominent scholars in the field of political communication.

Attendance requirements(%):

80%

Teaching arrangement and method of instruction: 1. The course is designed as a frontal lecture.

2. Students are expected to read the article required prior to each class. This is important and will help students succeed in the course.

3. The grade will be based on one assignment during the semester (40% of the grade) and a final paper (60%).
