Course/Module description:

What differentiates “the critic” from critical members of the audience? How does the television critic use printed press to articulate her commentary? Is remix the future of media criticism? This course reviews different forms of media criticism – about the media, in the media, and through the media. Drawing on a tradition of criticism and interpretation in literary and media studies and on sociological theories of taste and distinction, the course will explore the manners with which critics perceive their role and articulate critique and the factors that empower and limit their authority as critics.

Course/Module aims:

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

- * characterize different forms of media criticism*
- * describe the various agents of media criticism and their relationship with media institutions*
- * analyze communicative norms and values embedded in media criticism*
- * produce an original media criticism*
