Course/Module description:

The course will discuss social aspects of silence and denial. While the field of psychology emphasizes personal aspects of silence and denial, the class will focus on social dimensions of silence and denial and the tension between personal knowledge and social silencing. The course will address various kinds of silences and will discuss silences in a variety of spaces such as: memory and commemoration, the military, gender, culture, organizations and more. Our working assumption entails that the kind of things we pay attention to, talk about, ignore and keep silence around, are affected and shaped by social norms, culture, power relations and political constraints. Throughout the semester, we will define silences, understand their meaning, consider what is worth talked about and relate to, and discuss the tension between personal awareness and public discourse. We will also address the way in which silence can be broken, secrets can be revealed, advantages of keeping silence and the role of silence in collective memory. The first part of the course will focus on theoretical and conceptual issues while the second part will address case studies and analysis.

Course/Module aims:

1. Introducing the students to the sociology of silence and denial.
2. Studying and discussing central questions of the field (for example: how can one prevent from knowledge to become part of public discourse, how can information be socially ignored? How conspiracies of silence are constructed, how awareness of knowledge that the individual holds can be bridge with social silence, what does it take to break silence
3. Understanding the sociology of silence and denial
4. Acquiring the ability to sociologically analyze topics related to silence and denial

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

1. To think about the field in Sociological terms
2. To understand silence as a social category
3. to learn the major concepts and ideas of the field
4. To analyze social silences and understand their construction and meanings.
