Course/Module description:
We will explore psychological anthropology emphasizing current theories of subjectivity as developed mainly in the USA. Underscoring theoretical inquiry through ethnography, we'll follow changes in the past century and in recent decades: From Culture and Personality research to research into cultural relativism in constructing the self and we'll examine new conceptualization of the self like the fragmented self and self in context, self in action, self and institutions and subjectivity as a replacement for the self.

Course/Module aims:
Critical reading in psychological anthropology, following an analytical history of it and learning major currents and principles, thus setting the ground for future research within this paradigm.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:
-- Identify core principles in the early and current conceptualizations in psychological anthropology
-- Follow closely changes in the psychological anthropology paradigm.
-- Categorize the various approaches within this paradigm
-- Interpret relevant reading material in light of the paradigm principles
-- Generalize from a specific research ethnographic project to broader approaches
-- Criticize the various approaches in psychological anthropology to allow for further theoretical development
