Course/Module description:

The course aims at deepening students' understanding of how Germany navigates the challenge of promoting its own foreign policy agenda while being constrained by EU membership. We will start by discussing Germany's foreign policy from the end of World War Two until the creation of the EU in 1992, and the establishing of the EU Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP). We will discuss Germany's role in developing the CFSP, explore the specific mechanisms for dealing with international and regional conflicts, and to what extent these mechanisms affect the freedom of Germany to promote its own foreign policy agenda. Next, we will discuss Germany's position on EU enlargement policy and its desire to promote regional stability. We will also examine Germany's relationship to Russia and possible divergences with the EU's agenda. We will then devote special attention to the relations of Germany with the US, NATO, and examine future perspectives. Next, we will discuss German relations with Turkey and Iran, focusing on Germany's foreign policy goals and strategy vis-à-vis these countries. We will then focus on Germany's foreign policy in the Middle East and the effect of the Arab Spring and the migration crises. In particular, we will explore the ongoing relations between Israel and Germany and possible trajectories for the future. Finally, we will discuss the future of German external relations following Brexit, the migration crisis, and the new security threats.

Course/Module aims:

1. To provide an in depth understanding of German foreign policy goals.
2. To examine how Germany develops its foreign policy in light of its membership in the EU.
3. To analyze German foreign policy and strategy towards different countries and regions.
4. To assess the German response to various challenges facing Europe, such as the migration crises, Brexit, and instability in the Middle East.
5. To discuss possible future directions of German foreign policy.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

By the end of the course students will gain a better understanding of German foreign policy and the key debates that surround it. They will have a solid comprehension of the nature of Germany-EU relations, and the influence of Germany and the EU on each other. By obtaining insight into how Germany's foreign policy developed in the face of recent crises, students will have the tools to evaluate and analyze Germany's foreign policy and possible trajectories which this policy may take.
