Course/Module description:

This course aims to familiarize students with the literature that focuses on regional integration processes in Europe, while taking a comparative perspective towards parallel regionalist dynamics in the Americas and the Middle East. Indeed, “the quest for a region” has played a significant role in the social, political, and economic processes that European, Latin American, and Middle Eastern countries have developed since their independence.

Course/Module aims:

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

Throughout the course we will address the historical and ideational roots that are in competition, the multiplicity of regional integration projects designed by both internal and external powers, as well as the evolution of these institutional frameworks. We will also delve deeper into the theoretical underpinnings of regionalism, regional integration, and regional cooperation, exploring the European path in comparison to regionalist dynamics taking place in the Americas, the Middle East, and beyond. The combination of these perspectives is crucial for a more comprehensible analysis of the current role of regions in global politics and the main challenges and opportunities that these regional processes could face in the future.
