Course/Module description:

This course explores how the history of decolonization in Africa and South East Asia reshaped European nation-states and societies. We will first examine attempts of European, African, and South East Asian leaders to establish more equal forms of imperial rule in European colonies in the 1940s and early 1950s. We will then explore struggles toward decolonization in the 1950s and 1960s and learn about the dissolution of European empires. Throughout the course, we will explore various historical and theoretical questions about the unfolding and longterm consequences of decolonization: Was decolonization inevitable? Was it possible to undo colonial hierarchies and still preserve European empires? How did European leaders imagine postcolonial Europe? And how did decolonization change European societies and states?
