Course/Module description:

The course surveys the politics of contemporary Europe. In addition to delineating the basic institutional set-up of European democracies, the first part of the course introduces theoretical approaches commonly employed to understand European politics. We then take a systemic perspective and focus on issues and themes that have come to characterize the politics of exemplary European countries. In the final part, we adopt a decidedly comparative stance, highlighting the sources and consequences of different institutions, processes, and policy outcomes across the region.

Course/Module aims:

The course aims to equip students with a roadmap for understanding politics in European countries. It provides an overview of the variety of institutions, processes, and political outcomes that characterize democracies in the region. This will enable students to both contextualize day-to-day politics as well as analyze relevant topics and issues scientifically. To the letter end, the course introduces central debates in the respective academic literatures and showcases the variety of methods employed in the social sciences.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

- describe variation in institutions, processes, and policy outcomes across European democracies,
- analyze the interplay of political actors in both systemic as well as comparative perspective,
- explicate how the different issues relate to broader themes and developments in the politics of Europe.
