Course/Module description:

The Colloquium is the gathering of the European Forum's community of researchers and scholars, students and faculty. It is also a course that brings an introduction to cutting-edge research on a variety of issues pertaining to contemporary Europe. During the year, the Colloquium shall host researchers – both visiting colleagues and members of the European Forum – to lecture about their groundbreaking studies. Topics of such lectures shall reflect the variety of economic, political, cultural and other process occurring and experienced in contemporary Europe. The selection of lectures shall also reflect the multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary character of the European Forum, while emphasizing contemporary era, historical and comparative perspectives, and relevance for policy and social action.

In light of the spread of the Corona-virus, we continue to face a highly unusual and dynamic situation that may include changes to the courses as the semester progresses.

So we may have to be flexible to meet challenges and we will try to update students about changes as soon as we know about them.

Course/Module aims:

Course is intended to introduce frontier research on matters pertaining to contemporary Europe. The goals are: to introduce researchers leading the way in the study of contemporary European affairs; to expand horizons of variety of issues pertaining to contemporary Europe, variety of research methods, and variety of disciplinary perspectives; and, to develop critical-academic attitude in regard to groundbreaking research on contemporary European affairs.
