Course/Module description:

The course introduces the impact of memory on post-war German and European culture and society. Particularly in Germany, memory cultures, especially those related to the Nazi past, have a significant impact on national self-perception. Similarly, the European Union adopted politics of memory as central aspect of constructing a sense of shared but contested European identity.

Course/Module aims:

The course evaluates central chapters of Germany's (and Europe's) coming to terms with the Nazi past. We will focus on significant memory cultures: Holocaust memory, the memory of terrorism, memory and migration, compare German memory culture with ways of dealing with the past in other countries (such as Austria), discuss different memory concepts, such as communicative, cultural and media memory, traveling memories, entangled memories, multidirectional memory, resonant memories and transnational memory.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

- contextualize and analyze German postwar memory culture
- compare and evaluate changes and developments in German, Austrian and European memory cultures
- reflect the impact of memory on (shifting) identities
- read and understand theoretical concepts of memory

Attendance requirements(%):

80

Teaching arrangement and method of instruction: The course combines the historical reconstruction of postwar German and current European memory cultures with key texts from the discipline of memory studies. Students contribute different tasks: presenting memory conflicts, introducing theoretical articles and critically reflecting memorials and media memory

Course/Module Content:

- Cultural, communicative and media memory
- Coming to terms with the past in Germany and Austria
- European memory culture
- Monuments, memorials and memory sites

- Film and memory
 - Holocaust memory, memories of terrorism, migrant memories
 - Transnational, traveling, entangled and multidirectional memory
 - Memory and the city
