Course/Module description:

Germany has never been known officially as a country of immigrants, while - de facto - millions of its habitants today are of foreign descent, changing arguably the face of the country. The course examines the historical, economic, legal and cultural transformations associated with various migrations that often generated fervent public debates - from the recruitment of contract workers in the 1950s to the refugee crisis in 2015 and beyond. Furthermore, it focuses on issues raised by contemporary migration dynamics such as integration challenges as well as the role of the nation state, the emergence of Diasporas and their relevance for domestic and foreign policy.

Course/Module aims:

to provide the students with the necessary skills to critically assess various migration processes and challenges in contemporary Germany

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

- to assess the different migration waves to postwar Germany and their respective political implications
- to define the changing concepts of and approaches with respect to national collective identity.
- to differentiate between the outlook of different political parties
- to analyze media reports and their impact on the public discourse.
- to compare the German case to other European countries

Attendance requirements(%):
