Course/Module description:

"Being free is being entirely alone," according to the Israeli rock band "Benzin,"

but the question many political philosophers have asked is how to be free without being alone - while being the citizens of a state. This course investigates one of the central concepts of political thought: freedom. We will discuss three conceptions of freedom found in the contemporary scholarship: non-interference, non-domination, and self-government. We will look more deeply the concept of freedom by reading classical texts of political thought from Hobbes to our time.

The purpose of this class is double fold: to investigate the concept of freedom, and to serve as an advanced introduction to political thought, providing a foundation of knowledge and skills required for research in this field.
