Course/Module description:

This course deals with immigration, emigration and relations between immigrants and the elites and institutions of their countries of origin and destination. Throughout the year, we will talk about the various dilemmas faced by immigrants and refugees, as well as the governments and societies in the country they immigrated to and the country they emigrated from. We will examine these issues from a theoretical and generalized perspective, but we will also analyze specific historical and contemporary cases from different regions of the world. This is a graduate course that is also open to outstanding undergraduate students in the third year of their degree. It requires intensive reading of primary and secondary sources and discussing them in the classroom.

Course/Module aims:

* Getting familiar with basic concepts and key theories in migration, refugee, and diaspora studies.

* Understanding the main dilemmas underlying the migration process and the relationships that migrants and refugees have with their countries of origin and destination.

* Acquiring critical reading skills and and analyzing primary and secondary sources from various research disciplines.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:

* Explain basic concepts and key theories in migration, refugee, and diaspora studies.

* Critically discuss historical and contemporary issues of immigration from and to several countries, based on research from a variety of disciplines.

* Analyze such issues based on primary and secondary sources, summarize the findings in a written report, and present them to the class.
