Course/Module description:

In this course we will delve into the study of European nationalism. The primary focus will be on the three European 'Giants': Germany, Great Britain and France. The discussion will commence with the late 18th and nineteenth century Romantic movement and conclude with contemporary Europe, where nationalistic movements, especially in the light of recent events, show signs of great revival. Throughout the course we will examine core concepts such as 'language,' 'race,' 'ethnicity' and of course the 'nation.' The course will explore the main intellectual developments in the study of European nationalism through several canonical events and texts. We will trace the major tendencies and shifts and deal with subjects such as the main theories in the study of nationalism, the national 'myth,' 'memory' and whether and how nationalism should be perceived in our own times.
