Course/Module description:
This course seeks to introduce students to a number of topics and interesting new issues currently discussed in the literature of security studies in IR and nearby fields. The course will examine new methods for the study of international security, and raise a series of case studies, examples, and issues that implement these methods. The point of view of the course is critical, but not necessarily or always in the sense of "critical theory" (though such theory would have a place in the course ...).

Course/Module aims:
Present to the students innovative and issues of interest to contemporary security studies.

Learning outcomes - On successful completion of this module, students should be able to:
1. identify and recognize innovative trends in security studies.
2. think reflexively about international security.
3. become familiar with new and experimental research methods and writing styles in security studies.
