Course/Module description:

This course provides an overview of the societal responses to crime and criminal offenders. A broad overview of law enforcement, criminal courts, and the correctional system will be provided. Current issues and policies will be situated in their historical, sociopolitical, and legal contexts. In addition to the three major institutions of crime control, several cross-cutting themes and controversies which have special relevance to criminal justice will be considered over the course of the semester. These themes encompass the dualistic tensions faced at various times by criminal justice stakeholders and the public: public safety vs. civil liberties, independence vs. interdependence, discretion vs. determinacy, intuition vs. empiricism, and fairness vs. effectiveness, to name just a few.
