Course/Module description:

The course will examine the social processes involved in creating social rules and the symbiotic relationship between law and society. We will examine the goals, capabilities and limitations of the law as an agent of social change. The course will further focus on the ways in which rules are applied in practice by the various regulatory bodies, and discuss the different approaches to legal research, from a critical perspective. Special emphasis will be given compliance with the law, theories of law and society, case studies and various intersections between law and society in the economic sphere, philosophical, cultural and historical level. The course will heavily emphasize evidence-based policy and empirical study of the law
