The students learn the basic principles and the main doctrines of the BGB, which allows them to acquire basic knowledge of the continental thought in the field of civil law.

Course/Module aims:

Continental legal systems are characterized by an h way of thinking, general categories and exact rules that are similar to mathematical rules. This way of thinking is profoundly different from the casuistic thought, which characterizes the Anglo-American legal systems generally and the Israeli legal system in particular. The course aims to widen the horizons of the students by exposing them to a legal thought that profoundly differs from the one they are used to.
